

Full-Back Passing Options

Full backs should always be willing to receive the ball and join the teams attack

The wide player will come to feet, can you use the space behind for the forward?

Using this ball will force the defenders to drop and allow a forward to receive to feet.

Now the forward can turn and dribble at the defence.

The midfielder can now turn and play forward as the playmaker.

The opponents may look to crowd the centre of the pitch.

If this happens the opposite full back must be ready to join the attack.

You must always remember that your job is to support and feed the wide player, if he is free and in space, play to him early.

Once you have played the pass, go and support him from behind.

If the wide player goes inside, then you must support by going outside and beyond the ball to create an overlap.
